
FROM THE DESK OF

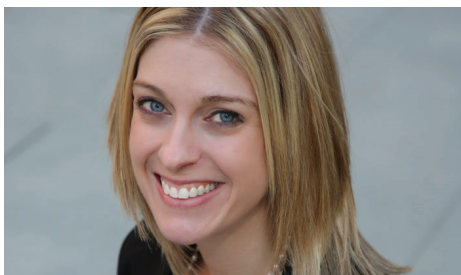

Jeffrey M. Williams

Here we are, well into the spring season. The clocks have changed, the temperatures are higher, and moods are lighter. Could it be that people are happy to see a new season, or are they feeling the levity that comes with being that much closer to the end of what is certainly the most extraordinary year that most of us have ever experienced?

Here at Williams Family Law, while we have returned to the office and a bit of normalcy, we continue to exercise caution. Some clients are comfortable visiting the office to discuss their matters (behind Plexiglas, of course), while others prefer video calls. Regardless of how we connect, and while the circumstances around us change almost daily, one thing remains constant: we are here and ready to help you with your family law matters and referrals and deeply appreciate your trust in us.

ADVICE THAT LAW SCHOOLS SHOULD OFFER TO NEW LAWYERS

By Shauna Quigley

Shauna contributed several articles last year to the “Young Lawyer” column of The Legal Intelligencer, the oldest law journal in America. In her final piece for 2020, she offered several practical tips for new attorneys that are not taught in law schools.

FINDING THE RIGHT WORK-LIFE BALANCE AS A YOUNG LAWYER

By David Hamilton

A famous line from “The Shining” embodies what many young lawyers strive for: a balance between working hard to build a new practice and making the most of time away from work. David’s article, also published in The Legal Intelligencer, covers how you can find the ways and time to develop yourself professionally without sacrificing much needed family (and “me”) time.

Jeff Williams and Bob Salzer assisted me with a very difficult custody case with our three children. I prevailed in winning legal and primary physical custody. Whilst the experience was difficult and drawn out, this law firm and these two lawyers treated me with dignity, worked tirelessly and always gave sound professional advice. They helped ensure the kids got a decent future with a stable home and support. I will be forever grateful for their help."
